Carle Place High School recently held its eighth annual Battle of the Classes, Battling for a Cause recently, raising more than $25,000.

The students raised the money between the Muddy Puddles, Penny Wars and Battle of the Classes events for the "Superly Foundation," which aims to fund research for cancer treatments specific towards pediatric.

Cindy Louis Campbell is the founder of the organization and created it in memory of her son, Tyler Louis Campbell. The organization aims to find pediatric cancer treatments that work without robbing

Hundreds of educators, parents and students from Westbury and all over Long Island gathered at Westbury High School March 12 to defend public education.

The crowd, which spilled from the Westbury High School auditorium into the gymnasium, rallied against what they called Governor Andrew Cuomo's "anti-public education propaganda."

Much of the crowd was made up of teachers who are members of New children of their childhood. The life of "SuperTy" was honored and celebrated at the event, while students competed in tug o' war, relay races, basketball, ultimate frisbee and a ski competition, all in the name of fundraising.

The Student Organization, with help from the Key Club, helped put on the successful event.

"The night couldn't have gone any better," said Student Organization treasurer Dan Mattondo. "Every grade had amazing participation and it was great being able to fundraise so much for a school this size. It really shows what kind of students we have here at Carle Place."

In the end, the senior class took home the win in fundraising and for the event. Senior class president and Key Club member, Augie Cavallaro, was recognized for fundraising $5,000 for SuperTy. For the past four years, Cavallaro has been the top fundraiser for Battle of the Classes, Battling for a Cause and has fundraised more than $18,000 in total.
